

How our state takes care of mothers and children

Published by the Slide Department of Hungarian Photograph, in association with the Natural Sciences Society. Commissioned by the Ministry of People's Education. Budapest, 1953.

In bourgeois Hungary, peasant women often gave birth in the fields. Now they deliver their babies in maternity centers, even here in Nádudvar, as well as in many other villages of the country. They receive medical help and excellent care.

It is because of Etelka Szabó, Kossuth-award winning nurse, that the mothers of Törökszentmikós understood that they should regularly take their children for medical check-ups.

Children of working women are now raised on mother's milk. Mothers working in the Textile Weaving Factory breast-feed their children who are attending nursery school, in a room specifically furnished for this purpose.

In the nursery school of Transvill, Mrs. György Szendrei confidently hands over her little son to the nurse, Mrs. László Masáth.

Zsuzsika Bohácsi, daughter of a Transvill worker, happily flies to into her mother's arms after an eventful day, just like many other children.

Thanks to the constant and loving care of our Party and socialist state, we're raising a healthy, strong, hardy and enthusiastic young generation.

For all this, mothers give the gratitude and love of the whole working nation to comrade Rákosi.